FARMERS

Are Meeting Their Quotas on Increased Food Production

Because:

In the ever-normal granary, several hundreds of thousands of bushels of corn were stored on the farms and in steel bins in the county.

And through the 1942 agricultural adjustment administration program, farmers know the future food needs of the nation and are meeting them.

This has been made possible through the farmer-controlled, farmer-directed movement known as the Triple A under which Agricultural Conservation Associations have been set up in every county in the United States. Within these county organizations are township committees in every township in order that the country's needs are immediately conveyed to all farmers of the nation.

Today's need is for increased production in the following commodities—dairy products, eggs, dressed beef and pork, soybeans and flax because of their oil content, tomatoes, corn and other vegetables for canning.

While planning to increase in these commodities, we should not lose sight of the fact that we still have a surplus of some farm crops—among these are wheat and cotton, and it will take careful effort on the part of all to get the needed increases and at the same time maintain the greatest resource of our nation—the fertility of our soil.

The Triple-A committeemen of your county are planning and working to a common end—victory over the enemy and continued stability of agriculture. Contact your township or county committee, they are ready and willing to assist you.
